Tossing salmon carcasses at Elk Creek

My current duties include those related to the management of recreation and natural resources at three Corps projects. Over my career, I've conducted extensive work with local and regional partners to complete mission and programmatic goals involving invasive species removal and threatened and endangered species habitat restoration. My work also includes coordinating real estate actions, public outreach, and volunteer programs. A collateral duty as project environmental compliance coordinator allows me to be part of a team of highly trained professionals dedicated to the protection of project lands and the environment. I'm also a strong supporter of using education to empower our visitors in support of the Corps mission.

I began working with the Corps in January 2007 as an AmeriCorps volunteer and student worker while finishing my degree in biology at the University of Oregon. Prior to beginning my career with the Corps, I spent time working in Alaska, managed an Everglade tour company in southwest Florida, and spent a recreation season as a dive master in the U.S. Virgin Islands. When not at work, my wife and I enjoy rafting the Rogue River, hiking and camping with our young children, and spending time around the house.
